Some composers produce their best work in their youth, and then either retire or deteriorate in old age; others, such as Mozart, Beethoven or Schubert, improve steadily, and their late works are their greatest. Johann Sebastian Bach is the most extraordinary example. In March and April of 1750 he had undergone two "eye operations", whatever that meant in 1750, and by July he was on his death bed, where he dictated his last composition to his pupil and son-in-law Johann Christoph Altnikol. It is a chorale prelude for organ, BWV668a, on a hymn tune written by Martin Luther himself. Most of the old hymn tunes have more than one set of words, and this one has two:

Wenn wir in höchsten Nöten sein und wissen nicht, wo aus noch ein, und finden weder Hülf noch Rat,
ob wir gleich sorgen früh und spät:
so ist dies unser Trost allein, daß wir zusammen allgemein dich anrufen, o treuer Gott, um Rettung aus der Angst und Not.

Vor deinen Thron tret’ ich hiermit, o Gott und dich demütig bitt:
wend’ dein genädig angesicht vor mir betrübtem Sünder nicht.

Both hymns are appropriate to the approach of death; but the first sings of deepest distress, and the second of something far more glorious. So Luther’s tune itself is ambiguous; it could refer to either set of words. In any chorale prelude the hymn-tune is woven into counterpoint with faster-moving motifs in other voices, and in this particularly strict counterpoint Bach constrains himself to taking these motifs from speeded-up phrases from the hymn-tune itself; so every note here stems from Martin Luther. However, the phrases that Bach has chosen for his motifs only fit one of the sets of words, namely Vor deinen Thron tret’ ich hiermit. The moment of death can be seen as painful, or as glorious; by his choice of notes Bach makes clear his point of view.
The chorale prelude is deeply connected to humanity. The voices lie within the ranges of a choir, the natural tempo of 72 quavers per minute refers to the human heart, and at the flow of nine bars per minute each bar coincides with the full breath in and out at deep rest; both these values were codified as the Integer Valor of the Middle Ages.

The intensely clear personal expression arising from the assumption of difficult technical constraints, the modesty, and yet also the exploit, of composing with only Martin Luther’s notes, the wonderful beauty of the piece and the personal circumstances under which it was written, combine to make this chorale prelude one of the greatest achievements of the western musical tradition.

It is offered here in a new edition, arranged for piano. The source was the first Bachgesellschaft edition, as reprinted by Dover in Johann Sebastian Bach - Organ Music. The phrasing and emphasis of all voices should accord to the text. The chorale melody (entering at bars 8, 19, 29 and 40) should be stronger and more sustained than the faster-moving contrapuntal voices. As from 2013, fingering is provided. There are two impractical stretches; on the sixth quaver of bar 9, a simple way is to take the bass F#, sustain it with the pedal, play the tenor A as a dotted quaver, and play the bass G by stretching the ninth; on the fourth quaver of bar 10, the simplest is to take the low D, sustain it with the pedal, and play the F# as a semiquaver. The long notes can be discreetly retaken, and preferably on the offbeats, so that for example the final G of fourteen beats could be taken as $3 + 2 + 2 + 2 + 2 + 2 + 3$ beats. Worth particular attention is the extraordinary beauty of the final cadence.
